

Contents

Preface	xi
P.1. Why the Philosophy of Comics?	xi
P.2. The Structure of the Book	xiii
Acknowledgments	xix
1. The Category of Comics	1
1.1. Exemplars	1
1.2. The Standard History	2
1.3. Cartoons as Style and Category	7
1.4. Are Comics Art?	15
1.5. Conclusions	25
2. Formal Definitions of Comics: Pictures, Panels, and Words	27
2.1. Can Comics Be Defined?	27
2.2. Extant Definitions	30
2.3. Less Plausible Necessary Conditions	32
2.4. More Plausible Necessary Conditions	41
2.5. Conclusions	53
3. The Media of Comics	57
3.1. An Introduction to Medium Specificity	57
3.2. What Comics Are Made Of	59
3.3. Defensible Medium Specificity	64
3.4. Tendencies of Comics Media in Practice	73
3.5. Conclusions	79
4. Narrative, Time, and Space	83
4.1. Narrativity	83
4.2. The Verbal Dimension	85
4.3. The Pictorial Dimension	93
4.4. Seriality	103
4.5. Conclusions	105
5. Adaptation	109
5.1. Adaptation and Viability	109
5.2. The “Impossibility” of Adaptation	114
5.3. The Kindred of Comics and Film	124
5.4. Conclusions	130

6. Evaluating Comics	133
6.1. Criticism and Relativism	133
6.2. Value-Making Properties	138
6.3. The Umbrella Category	148
6.4. Conclusions	153
7. Social and Moral Problems	157
7.1. The Platonic Strategy	157
7.2. Creators and Audiences	161
7.3. Reading Process and Format	165
7.4. Content	167
7.5. Conclusions	172
Afterword	175
Notes	179
References	187
Index	195